After summarizing the parts of the message, the teacher plans to have the 10 students take the role of the speaker.	After the video is over, the teacher plans to have the whole class play a game to reinforce the skill she taught.	The teacher found an article in one of her supplemental resources during the geography unit.	The teacher creates a list of historical figures that will require the students' knowledge of the age of exploration.	The teacher's last one assignment has a variety of high-level questions for some students above those that will appear in learning.
Despite having a rubric that rates 12 points, the teacher plans to use that as the sole measure for his Common Core unit.	The teacher shares his students' self-created writing prompts because they believe better when they can discuss what they want their work.	The teacher's lesson plans are well-formatted, but the timing for each activity is too short.	The teacher plans for students to complete projects in small groups, but each activity group members based on their ability level and learning style.	While completing their projects, the teacher's students will have access to a wide variety of resources that he has coded by reading level so they can make the best decisions.
The teacher organizes her class to review, using the students' self-identified, the points to have students work all year in groups of three based on where they are sitting.	The teacher's lesson plans are well-formatted, but the timing for each activity is too short.	The teacher's lesson plans are well-formatted, but the timing for each activity is too short.	The teacher's lesson plans are well-formatted, but the timing for each activity is too short.	After the cooperative group lesson, students will reflect on their participation and make suggestions for a group arrangement in the future.
The teacher's lesson plans are written on sticky notes in his pocket book, the students receive, write, or use.				The lesson plan clearly indicates the core concepts taught in the lesson. However, the teacher plans for his students to find the correct lesson materials in their class personally learned.
